* Please note: This sale is for the purpose of selling used children's clothing, toys, books, sports equipment, etc. Businesses are not permitted to set up full tables to sell their items. If you do have a business targeted towards children and you would like to be a vendor at this sale you are required to also sell used children's items and not devote your entire table to your business.

2) Online Survey on Resilience of Victims of Violent Crime

A new study seeks to learn what makes victims of violent crime resilient. The study, conducted by researchers from Algonquin College and the University of Ottawa in partnership with the Victim Justice Network, is asking participants how they coped after trauma and tragedy, and how they found support and inner strength.

Most of the current research in Victimology focuses on the negative impacts of victimization, including physical, emotional, financial, and social impacts. By contrast, this project would like to highlight the resilience of victims and learn how victims grow and enhance their strengths through some of the most traumatic experiences of their lives.

The survey is open to all victims and survivors of crime (including sexual violence, intimate partner violence, homicide, human trafficking, stalking, and any other type of abuse). Participants must be over the age of 18, and their case must not currently be the subject of a criminal trial. You can access the survey by clicking here.

See the attached document with information on frequently asked questions. For more information contact: Leah Moody moodyl@algonquincollege.com

3) Amnesty International Investigating Online Violence and Harassment Against Women on Social Media Platforms

Amnesty International is investigating the human rights implications of online violence and harassment against women on social media platforms such as Facebook, Twitter and Reddit. We are looking for stories from women who have experienced violent threats and harassment online specifically related to their gender as well as any other intersecting forms of identity (e.g. race, sexual orientation, religion, gender identity or expression, etc.) as well as from individuals who may identify as non-binary but have also received misogynistic abuse online.

As part of the research for the VAW Online project, we have set up a questionnaire to be promoted through social media channels and networks asking women about their experiences of online violence on Facebook, Twitter, and Reddit. The purpose of the questionnaire is to collect qualitative information and case studies from women about specific experiences of online abuse specifically targeting their gender and/or other intersecting forms of their identity. Any information they submit will be reviewed and corroborated through a follow up interview with the respondent if it will be published as part of Amnesty's research.

We are hoping that by promoting the questionnaire through our networks that we will be able to include stories of online violence from 'everyday women' whose experiences are more difficult to collect. We are also actively looking for stories from journalists, bloggers, women's rights activists, and women engaged in politics and who have experienced online violence.

We would appreciate it greatly if you could pass this questionnaire on to your networks. And if you have questions about the project you can reach out to Kaitlyn Denzler at kdenzler@aiusa.org.
