India

India is one country many people long to see, and having seen it once, wish to return again and again. It is impossible not to be astonished by India. Nowhere on Earth does humanity present itself in such creative bursts of cultures, religions, races and tongues. Every aspect of the country presents itself in a massive, exaggerated scale, worthy in comparison to the superlative mountains that overshadow it

The conventional name for India is the Republic of India. The name India is derived from the River Indus, the valleys around which were the home of the early settlers. It is bounded by the Indian Ocean on the south, the Arabian Sea on the southwest and the Bay of Bengal on the southeast. India shares land borders with Pakistan to the west, Bhutan, the People's Republic of China and Nepal to the northeast and Bangladesh and Burma to the east. India is the second most populous country with over 1.2 billion people.

History Of India:

The people of India have had a continuous civilization since 2500 B.C., when the inhabitants of the Indus River valley developed an urban culture based on commerce and sustained by agriculture trade. The civilization declined around 1500 B.C., probably due to ecological changes.

The first British outpost in South Asia was established in 1619 at Surat on the northwestern coast. Later in the century, the East India Company opened permanent trading stations at Mardra (now known as Chennai), Bombay, and Calcutta, each under the protection of native rulers. The British expanded their influence from these footholes and by the 1850's they controlled most of present-day India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh.

In the later 1800's, the first steps were taken toward self-government in British India with the appointment of Indian councilors to advise the British viceroy and the establishment of provincial councils with Indian members. Beginning in 1920, Indian leader Mohandas K. Gandhi transformed the Indian national Congress political party into a mass movement to campaign against British colonial rule. The party used both parliamentary and nonviolent resistance and non-cooperation to achieve independence.

On August 15th, 1947, India became a dominion within the Commonwealth. Enmity between Hindus and Muslims led the British to partition British India, creating East and West Pakistan, where the Muslim majorities. India became a republic within the Commonwealth after declaring its constitution on January 26th, 1950.

Geography and Climate:

India consists of 26 states and holds virtually every kind of landscape imaginable. The total land area in India is 2.9 million square kilometers. The total area including territorial seas claimed is 3.2 million square kilometers. An abundance of mountain ranges and national parks provide ample opportunity for eco-tourism and trekking, and it's sheer size promises something for everyone.

Climate varies significantly from Himalayas in north to tropical south. The four seasons consist of relatively dry, cool winter December to February. Dry hot summer March to May. Southwest monsoon June to September when predominating southwest maritime winds bring rains to most of the country and retreating monsoon during October and November

Population and Culture:

India with its 1.2 billion people has over 15% of the world's population living in only 2 % of the world's space. This makes India a very densely populated country. Although India has many large cities, less than 30% of the population live in cities.

The caste system still controls India's society. A person's social level is determined by birth, such as rulers, merchants, artisans and servants. There are also many people who fall outside the caste system. These outcasts have no social or economic role. Despite India's growing economy, its large population keeps most people below poverty levels.

Over 80% of the Indian population are Hindu. Muslims represent about 10%, with the other religions such as Buddhism and Christianity making up the rest.

Indians do not use cutlery for eating most foods. Traditional Indian cutlery does not recognize the use of forks and knives while eating. Spoons may be used for soupy foods such as daals.

Cardinal rule of dining is to always use the right hand when eating or receiving food. The left hand is not used for eating so that it can be used for serving food from the serving dish onto your plate using serving spoons. However if you are left handed it is vice-versa.

Indian Clothing:

Indian clothing is very colorful. Each state has its own special costumes, but there are several styles common throughout the country. Women traditionally wear saris, ghaghra cholis or salwar khameez. But women today, especially in cities, may also wear western styles such as skirts or dresses, blouses, and pants. Men have their traditional costumes as well, but most now wear a light shirt and pants just as in western countries.

The sari is one of the most common and oldest forms of dress for women in India. Many regional costumes are variations of this basic style. The fabric is either silk or cotton. Saris can be solid color or patterned; some are embroidered or hand dyed. Others are converted in tiny mirrors or metallic decoration.

The ghaghra cholis are another type of dress for women. A long pleated skirt (the ghaghra) is worn with a long or short stitched and fitted blouse (the choli). They are most often worn in western states, but can be seen all over the country. Both the ghaghra and the choli are beaded or covered with tiny mirrors. Sometimes they are dyed in detailed patterns.

The salwar khameez is an outfit made of a long tunic called a khameez and loose pants called salwar. Salwar khameez originated in northern India, but soon spread across the country. Like other forms of clothing in India, the salwar khameez can be richly decorated or simple for everyday use. They are made of silk or cotton, and usually worn with a scarf called an odhni.
